LOT 266.

THE ALBERT MEDAL.

FIRST CLASS (GOLD)

FOR GALLANTRY IN SAVING LIFE ON LAND, to WILLIAM COLE, P.C.

75 for gallantry at a dynamite explosion at WESTMINSTER HALL,
24th January, 1885, in case, very fine and extremely rare 1

d

Westminster Hall was yesterday the scene of a significant ceremony which, the Times considers, deserves something more than a passing chronicle. Sergeant Cole, the police-constable who, at the risk of his life, carried the packet of dynamite from the Crypt, where it had been deposited by the miscreants who designed the outrage, into Westminster Hall, was presented by the Home Secretary with the Albert Medal, awarded by the Sovereign for distinguished bravery. Seldom has this rare distinction been more worthily earned. In the mere discharge of his ordinary duty—a duty not without personal risks at all times, though seldom demanding the display of exceptional heroism—Cole encountered a peril as great as mortal man can be called upon to confront. He encountered it with absolute fearlessness, with no thought of himself, and with a simple regard to the discharge of his duty. A coward confronted with the emergency with which Cole had to deal would have thought first of his own safety, and even a man of ordinary courage might have been excused if the peril of the moment had paralysed him. But Cole showed himself to be a man of no ordinary mettle. We will not disparage the force to which he belongs by even suggesting that there are not many of his comrades who, in like circumstances, would have acted exactly as he did. But it is the actual emergency that tries the man, and when a man has been tried and has not been found wanting in such an emergency as that which Cole encountered, he has established an indefeasible title to the ungrudging esteem of his comrades and the unstinted gratitude of his countrymen. It is not in military service alone, in the glory of victory or the patient endurance of the hardships and trials of war, that English heroism is displayed. Cole and Cox are heroes in a humbler and less conspicuous sphere than that which has attracted the admiration of mankind in all ages, but for that very reason their courage is the more praiseworthy, and its acknowledgment by their countrymen should be not less spontaneous and full.—Vide Daily Press.
